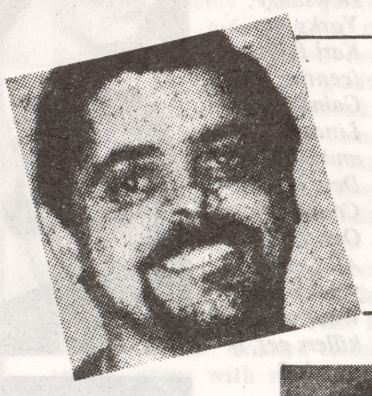
VOICE OF BRITISH NATIONALISM

Softness of authority lets thugs and rapists off the hook

BRITAIN BECOMING CRIMINALS' PARADISE



DAVID LEWIS
Crippled woman constable for life, yet only got 8 years.

THE YORKSHIRE RIPPER
Committed ghastly murders but now lives comfortably in psychiatric hospital.

These Black thugs killed Terry May but the worst any of them got was 5 years.

BRITAIN is currently witnessing an explosion of violent crimes without parallel in her history, including many murders and assaults of the vilest kind imaginable. Child murders, vicious rapes and brutal attacks on old people, once very rare occurrences, are now becoming so commonplace that we are in danger of treating reports on them as quite normal items of daily news.

Yet in the face of this epidemic the supposed custodians of 'law and order' are doing nothing to discourage would-be culprits. Sentences handed out in the courts to those convicted of the most fiendish acts of violence vary from the pathetic to the laughable. The term 'getting away with murder' is no longer merely a figure of speech; large numbers of killers are literally doing just that, while others guilty of maiming their victims, and in some cases crippling them for life, are being penalised so inadequately that scarcely any deterrent is being offered to them and to others against the commission of similar crimes in the future.

Everyone should remember the infamous killing of Terry May, a White youth riding on his motorcycle minding his own business in Thornton Heath, South London, in June 1981. May was picked on by a gang of Blacks and beaten to death merely because of his colour, yet when the culprits were brought to court several months later the worst any of them received was a conviction for riot and affray and a prison sentence of 5 years!

Paralysed

More recently, a young policewoman Maureen Martin was blasted at short range by a shotgun when she went with a colleague to arrest a man in Gateshead. She was paralysed from the waist down and will spend the rest of her life in a wheelchair. Her attacker, on the other hand, received a mere 8-year prison sentence after getting off the most serious charge of attempted murder on a plea that his gun went off 'by accident'. If he keeps his nose clean in jail, he will be a free man in less than 6 years.

An Indian who committed a vile sexual assault on a 6-year-old girl near Halifax, Yorkshire received a ridiculous 1-year sentence of which 8 months were suspended. Eventually he served even less time in jail than the 4 months he should have done, being released early because of fears for his safety in prison – a peculiar decision, since there are provisions under the penal code for such prisoners to be segregated from other inmates while in custody. Within a very short time of this man's being sentenced, his young victim was subjected to the horror of seeing him walk about her locality again a free man. She broke into a fit of

WHY ARE TERRORISTS RUNNING FREE?

KEN LIVINGSTONE

SPEAKING in the Commons about the Home Secretary's belated decision to ban Sinn Fein leaders from coming to London at the invitation of GLC leader Ken Livingstone, Mrs. Thatcher is reported to have said: "The Home Secretary was satisfied about their past involvement (in terrorist activities) and rightly and responsibly made these orders."

In view of this statement, New Frontier asks why, if the Home Secretary is aware of the terrorist activities of these men, have they not been arrested and charged? It seems quite extraordinary that people known by the responsible authorities to be involved with terrorists are allowed to remain free.

Equally disturbing is Mr. Jim Prior's statement in the Commons after the Ballykelly bomb outrage informing us that the Government is not prepared to restore the death penalty for murder in Northern Ireland because it would lead to trouble "ten times worse than the funerals of the hunger strikers." So because of the possibility of "trouble", the Government shies away from the need to take firm action to deter terrorists! In other words, anarchy and lawlessness reign on account of IRA threats.

But to get back to Mr. Livingstone and his colleagues. By inviting the Sinn Fein leaders to London they have clearly shown that the Labour party is a party of treason. Mr. Foot's refusal to expel Livingstone & Co. from the party emphasises the fact. IT MUST NOW BE OBVIOUS TO ANYONE WHO THINKS ABOUT THE MATTER THAT THE LABOUR PARTY CARES MORE FOR FOREIGNERS, BE THEY IRISH OR BLACKS, THAN IT DOES ABOUT THE BRITISH WORKING PEOPLE WHOM IT CLAIMS TO REPRESENT. In the hands of people like Messrs. Livingstone and Foot, the Labour party is far more dangerous to our country than Burgess, Maclean & Co. ever were.

And there is another point. The troubles resulting from the hunger strikers' funerals occurred because the Government allowed them to take place in public. These men committed suicide and should therefore have been privately buried in prison precincts. Even the Roman Catholic Church could hardly complain since, according to the Church's own dogma, suicide is a mortal sin.

We have said it before: a policy of weakness in Northern Ireland only begets more bloodshed.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION

THE YEAR just ended was in many ways a year of contrasts. It was a year of rising unemployment, of unnecessary and unjustified strikes, of unabated coloured immigration, of increasing lawlessness, of sporadic rioting, of barbaric IRA atrocities, of spy scandals, of moral degeneracy – in short, it was a year highly indicative of a nation in decay.

But for the British people 1982 was redeemed by one outstanding event – Britain's magnificent victory in the Falklands war. Those few weeks of achievement and heroism did much to restore a sense of pride, purpose and patriotism among many Britons who, under the "leadership" of Tory and Labour governments, have during the past 35 years become more accustomed to failure and humiliation, to surrender and scuttle.

However, the Falklands victory does not belong to the politicians, much as some of them would like us to believe. Far from contributing towards that victory, the politicians of all the main parties, from Mrs. Thatcher downwards, must take a major share of the blame for allowing the Argentine forces to invade the Islands in the first place. The credit for the successful expulsion of the invaders lies solely with our superb servicemen. They set an example of courage and patriotism from which the whole nation should learn. They showed us how devotion to duty, will-power, professionalism and inspired leadership can overcome almost insurmountable obstacles.

British Nationalists can also learn much from the example set by our servicemen in the South Atlantic, because we are facing odds that are almost as insuperable as those they faced last summer. Indeed, in some respects our task is even more daunting than theirs was; for whereas they faced an enemy that could be seen and dealt with, many of those who oppose us lurk hidden from view, and are for that reason all the more dangerous. Therefore we must gird ourselves for action with the same dedication and care as did our soldiers, sailors and airmen before they ousted the invaders from the Falklands.

Despite the modest advances made by British Nationalists during 1982, it would be foolish to deny that we are still in the doldrums. If, during the coming year, we can engender even a fraction of the Falklands Spirit among our supporters, then we will have achieved something worthwhile. Fortunately, the British National Party has emerged during 1982 to provide the foundations and leadership upon which the resurgence of our nation can be built.

Let that be the task to which we address ourselves during the coming year. Let our New Year's resolution for 1983 be to fight even harder for the ultimate triumph of British Nationalism.

hysterics and her family have now decided in disgust to emigrate overseas to somewhere where, in the words of her mother, "criminals are actually punished."

In March 1982 a Coloured South African killed his next door neighbour by slitting her throat with a machete. He pleaded guilty to manslaughter on the grounds of 'racial provocation', and admitted wounding two other people. What did he get? A sentence of 2 years suspended!

Law in contempt

These unbelievably light penalties are bringing the law of the land into total contempt by the criminal fraternity and, not surprisingly, leading to an escalation of the very worst types of violent crime. The would-be murderer, thug or rapist knows that, if caught, he stands an extremely good chance of appearing before a sloppy and soft judge and getting off with only a short term in jail or perhaps not even going to jail at all. Is it any wonder that he contemplates his criminal acts with impunity?

The judges responsible for these ridiculous sentences should indeed be condemned by society, as many of them are. But to condemn just those judges is not enough. They are simply the natural products of a spirit of softness which permeates right through the upper levels of society itself, those levels from which our judiciary is recruited, at which legislation is inspired and passed by parliament and at which policies for dealing with crime are formulated. We are talking now about Britain's powerful and influential 'liberal' establishment – best epitomised in the dripping wet personality of the present Home Secretary Willie Whitelaw.

It is Whitelaw who is responsible for the unwritten edict to judges to avoid long prison sentences for fear of adding to the overcrowding of our jails. It is Whitelaw who is responsible for similar unwritten edicts to judges and police to go easy particularly on Coloured offenders for the sake of good 'race relations'. It is Whitelaw who, more than anyone else, is responsible for the pussyfooting treatment of terrorist criminals like those of the IRA, who when they are apprehended (which is all too seldom) are sent to the most comfortable and cushy prison in the United Kingdom, the Maze Prison near Belfast, where they can expect to live a lot better than many of Britain's pensioners and unemployed.

Blame on Premier

No less to blame than Whitelaw is Prime Minister Thatcher herself. She of course likes to make a show of indignation when the most revolting crimes are committed, for instance writing a personal letter to a rape victim's parents, but in fact she has steadfastly refused even to contemplate removing Wobbly Willie from his position at the Home Office and has always staunchly defended him when he has been under attack.

Mrs. Thatcher has recently made another gesture to placate public opinion by saying that in future cases of sexual assault should only be heard by senior judges, of the kind who preside over murder trials. Such a proposition, however, is quite meaningless. These judges, like all others, are recruited and chosen from a section of society in which 'liberalism' and softness have become so deep-rooted that the will to govern and maintain order has almost disappeared.

Changes in appointments to the judiciary and amendments in legislation are only tickling at the real problem. The real problem is the spirit of weakness and surrender – in a word, 'liberalism' – that has permeated the ruling classes of Britain and is to be found wherever 'educated' people congregate, a spirit which first infects youngsters in the schools through the influence of their teachers and is then carried through to the universities, which predominates in the world of broadcasting and much of the press, which prevails throughout most of the political spectrum and therefore in parliament itself.

It is the spirit which caught hold of the patrician classes during the decline and fall of the Roman Empire and which paralysed those classes in the face of that Empire's enemies, both external and internal.

Only a revolution in British society can overcome that spirit and substitute a new spirit. Nothing less will halt the progression towards lawlessness, anarchy and the collapse of order everywhere.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir,–The recent Government White Paper on Nationality states that proposals to clear the backlog of UK passport holders waiting to come to Britain from the Indian sub-continent "does not take sufficient account of the anxieties in this country about too rapid immigration."

Too rapid an immigration!!! Presumably what the Government means is that immigration is OK providing it is not "too rapid"! Are they mad? Will they never learn? Do they still not understand that, even if immigration were stopped now, the coloured birthrate in Britain is such that we Whites will soon be outnumbered in our own land?

BRITAIN ROTTEN WITH TRAITORS

Big clean-up needed instead of pussyfooting by Government

THE CROP of spy trials which have recently taken place follows a pattern which has become all too familiar over the years. On almost every occasion when someone has been convicted for passing secret information to a potential enemy, the powers-that-be have informed us that these were only isolated cases, and that the system of "positive vetting" was being tightened up to prevent any further damage to our national interests. That is what they told us at the time of the Burgess and Maclean affair in 1951, and that is what we are now being told after the recent convictions of Geoffrey Prime, Professor Hugh Hambleton and Rhona Ritchie. Isolated cases, it seems, occur with monotonous regularity.

One thing needs to be said about these people and others who, over the years, have betrayed their country: they are not spies, but traitors. Spies are people who, on behalf of their own country, infiltrate a foreign country in order to obtain information that might be useful, particularly in time of war. Real spies like the Russian Konon Molody, alias Gordon Lonsdale, deserve respect, for they serve their country and do nothing dishonourable – indeed, they must be regarded as patriots because they do an extremely dangerous job on behalf of their respective countries.

DESPICABLE

Compared with spies, traitors deserve no sympathy, if only because they are prepared to betray their fellow countrymen for gain. They are thoroughly despicable people who deserve our contempt. It is a fact that many of them possess other equally repugnant characteristics: Prime was a sexual pervert who molested little girls; Burgess, Maclean, Vassall and Blunt were all homosexuals; and Rhona Ritchie is a woman who was prepared to trade secret information to obtain the sexual favours of a foreign diplomat. Another distinguishing feature of postwar British traitors is that almost without exception they were specially favoured and therefore had every reason to be grateful to their native land and its people. Nearly all of them came from good and affluent homes, were well educated, were gifted and had good and interesting jobs. For these reasons their treachery was all the more despicable.

HUGH HAMBLETON
Betrayed Britain for 30 years.

DETERRENT

What then should be done to deter would-be traitors? Mr. Roy Hattersley, Labour's spokesman on Home Affairs, has suggested that the answer is to make Britain's security services answerable to a parliamentary select committee. Heaven forbid! Parliament probably houses more actual and potential traitors than any institution in the land. Not many years ago one Labour MP, the late Will Owen, was lucky not to be sent to prison following a trial in which he admitted that he had received £2,300 from Czech agents to whom he had supplied information. And it is well known that a former chairman of the Labour party, the late Tom Driberg MP, was for many years a traitor. Driberg, who was a notorious homosexual, was a close friend of both Burgess and Maclean. We would be extremely foolish if we were to imagine that there are no more traitors in Parliament. Chapman Pincher in his book, Their Trade is Treachery, has written: "Some of the MPs are even named – by their code-names – in KGB radio traffic. The late Konni Zilliacus was one of them and Driberg was another. I greatly regret that, at this stage, I am unable to name others who are still alive and shelter behind the libel laws, as it is difficult to induce any Intelligence source to appear as a witness, as MI5 itself knows only too well."

GEOFFREY PRIME
Traitor and child-molester

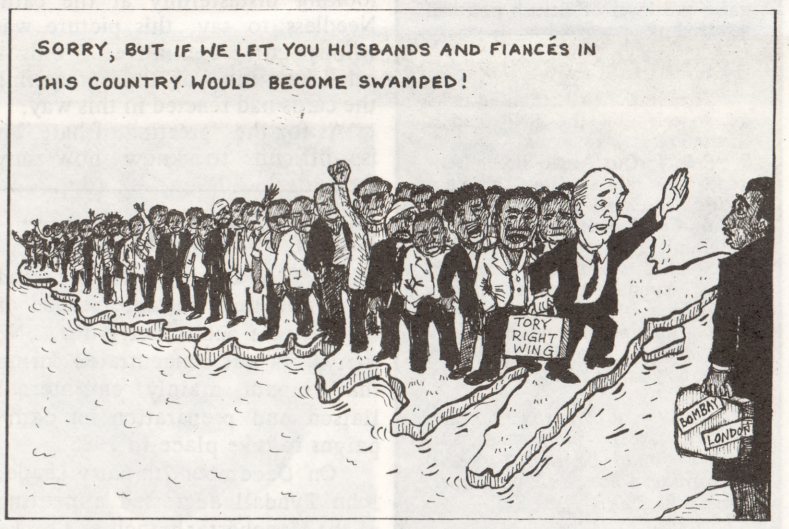
DEATH PENALTY

There is only one way to deal with traitors: execute them. The law still permits the death penalty for treason. Let it be used for those who are found guilty of this heinous crime. Such a deterrent will be far more effective than any number of parliamentary select committees.

Shutting the stable door

NEW FRONTIER devoted the front page of its November issue to an attack on the Government's plan to betray its election promises on immigration by letting into Britain the husbands and male fiances of immigrant women. The plan was subsequently defeated (for the moment) in the Commons by a peculiar alliance of right-wing Tories and Labourites, Liberals and Social Democrats – the former voting against it for totally opposite reasons to the others.

While we agree with the right-wing Tory opposition to the plan, we should not be fooled into thinking these right-wingers' 'revolt' has any significance. What the revolt is against, in effect, involves just a few tens of thousands of additional immigrants. To raise steam over such a matter is absolutely laughable when we consider the 5 or 6 million immigrants already here whom the Tory rebels have no plan to remove.



TALKING POINTS

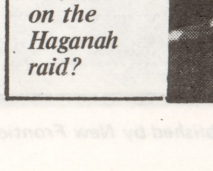
by FRONTIERSMAN

PRIZE FOR THUGS

Reading New Equals – a publication that few people read, save those of us whose unpleasant task it is to find out what the treasonable and anti-British Commission for Racial Equality is up to – I chanced to notice an advertisement announcing that an annual prize is to be awarded by Searchlight in memory of the late, unlamented and altogether repulsive Maurice Ludmer (no prizes for guessing his ancestry!). The prize, "a specially commissioned sculpture by the artist Dan Jones," will be awarded for the article, essay, book or TV programme which makes the most significant contribution to "anti-Fascist and anti-racist research." I've never heard of Dan Jones, but I rather suspect that he is one of those "artists" who manufacture lumps of concrete with holes in the middle and twisted pieces of metal welded together. Anyway, if I'm right, his efforts may be of some use to the brick-throwing, fire-raising, rioting thugs who read such trash as is contained in Searchlight and New Equals. I suggest that Searchlight's resident criminal, Gerry Gable, be nominated as first recipient of the Ludmer Award!

UNRAVELLING THE TRUTH

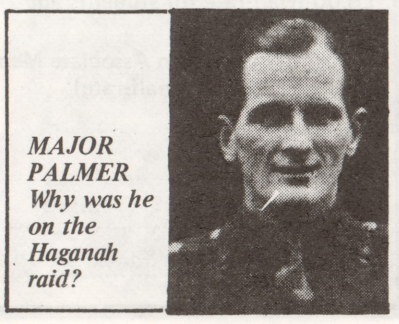
As more facts about the First and Second World Wars come to light, it is becoming increasingly difficult to understand whose side some of our better-known leaders were fighting for. In recent years allegations about the sinking of the Lusitania, the catastrophic Dardanelles campaign, the mysterious death of General Sikorski, the tragedy of Pearl Harbour, the bombing of Dresden, the Yalta sell out, and the betrayal of large numbers of Cossacks and Ukrainians who were forcibly returned to the Soviet Union after the last war have baffled many patriotic Britons who are interested in modern history. During the past month I have chanced to come across two more strange tales to emerge from the Second World War.



GENERAL METAXAS
Was he 'liquidated' by the British?

According to Greece's Communist Party newspaper, Rizopastis, Adolf Hitler and Winston Churchill made a secret agreement during the war to prevent the Communists gaining control of Greek territory vacated by the retreating Germans. Obviously one should not attach too much importance to claims made in a Communist paper, but the allegations do support remarks made by the late Albert Speer in his book, Inside The Third Reich. The claims made by Rizopastis followed a recent Greek TV documentary suggesting that Greece's wartime leader, General Metaxas, who died in 1941, was "liquidated" by the British because he wouldn't agree to RAF units being based in Northern Greece, where they would have posed a threat to the Rumanian Ploesti oilfields, then under German control. Shortly after the General's death, British forces were allowed into Northern Greece.

An even stranger story has emerged as a result of Israel's brutal and bloody occupation of the Lebanon. According to a report in The Times, a special Israeli unit has been sent to the Lebanon to search for the remains of 23 members of the Jewish Haganah terrorist group, which made an abortive attempt to destroy Vichy-controlled oil refineries on the Lebanese coast in 1941. Israeli officers have even placed anonymous advertisements in the Beirut newspaper, L'Orient le Jour, promising rewards for information leading to the discovery of the whereabouts of the remains. Even more intriguing is the revelation that a British officer, Major Sir Anthony Palmer, accompanied the Haganah terrorists on their mission. This raises a couple of interesting questions. First, what was a British officer doing accompanying a gang of Jewish cut-throats belonging to an organisation that in 1941 was regarded as illegal by the British Government? And second, why was he participating in an attack against Vichy territory at a time when Britain was not at war with the Vichy Government? It is difficult to answer these questions until more information becomes available; but I can't help thinking that this little-known exploit was yet another British contribution towards establishing a Jewish "National Home".



MAJOR PALMER
Why was he on the Haganah raid?

PROGRAMME FOR PERVERTS

Not being a great TV watcher, I haven't as yet seen any programme on Channel 4, which was launched with so much ballyhoo a few weeks ago. At the time of the launch I suspected that the new Channel was simply another ploy by the aliens who control the media to subvert and corrupt further the British televiewing public. From all accounts, it seems that my suspicions have been fully confirmed. Apparently Channel 4 has already acquired notoriety as a result of its attempts to pour alien-inspired filth and obscenity, punctuated by bad language, into our sitting rooms. However, even in these permissive times some MPs are taking umbrage at Channel 4's announcement that it is to screen a "homosexual entertainment programme" on New Year's Day. According to the programme's producer, Paul Oremland, himself a homosexual, the show, entitled One in Five, "Is meant to be fun." I can think of nothing so devoid of fun as a TV programme for perverts, especially when it is screened over the Festive Season. If Channel 4 can't do better than that, then the sooner it is taken off the air the better for all of us.

NEWS CENSORSHIP

THE EDITOR takes another look at UNESCO's bid to control public information

IN AN ARTICLE I wrote for Spearhead 16 months ago, I drew attention to efforts being made by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) to control the distribution of news under the guise of setting international standards and codes of practice for broadcasters and journalists. I wrote that UNESCO's real intention "was to introduce a system that would enable the one-worlders of the UN to impose global censorship on TV and radio broadcasters, newspaper reporters and news agencies operating throughout the world, and particularly in the so-called 'Third World'."

According to a Reuter report issued last month, this effort to control the flow of news has come a step closer following a UNESCO conference held in Paris. The report states that the creation of a "New World Information and Communication Order" (NWICO) is almost certain to be approved on the insistence of "Third World" and Communist States.

Predictably, the setting up of NWICO (also known as "Communications in the Service of Man") was approved with minor amendments by delegates at the conference, including the British delegate. NWICO was one of 13 projects drafted by UNESCO planners for introduction during the next few years.

SCRUTINY

One of the suggestions approved at the Paris conference was that UNESCO should have the right to scrutinise the text of news messages transmitted internationally and that journalists should be instruments to promote UN-sponsored ideas on world problems.

Readers of New Frontier, unlike most readers of the Establishment Press, will recognise the significance of UNESCO's success in gaining control over the international news media. The deliberations that have taken place in Paris are nothing less than an attempt to introduce planned obfuscation into the dissemination of news. The plot is truly Orwellian in concept; but then we are only one year away from 1984.

GREETING CARD PROJECT WINS BIG PUBLICITY

AN INITIATIVE by a young British National Party member has reaped big dividends for the party in the way of publicity.

Last year Tony Wells of Redbridge Branch acquired names and addresses of all young people in his borough who had recently reached their 18th birthdays and become eligible to vote. At his own expense he had printed a special birthday greetings card which was sent to these youngsters introducing them to the BNP and recommending them to join the party.

TONY WELLS
Took initiative

This project was reported last Summer in Spearhead magazine. At the time of course it was too early to gauge the effect of the project. Tony Wells, however, was commended on his initiative and the financial sacrifice he had made to promote the project.

Now it is possible to form some judgement of the results. They have been most encouraging. The party has received a great many enquiries expressing interest on the part of young people in the Redbridge area of London. And the project has made a big impact in the local press.

Naturally, the press was not favourable. A front-page report in the Ilford Recorder described the card circulated by Tony Wells as a "sick greeting of hate", and spoke of the local people who had been 'angered' by it – saying nothing of course of the many who had reacted to it favourably. One family was found where the parents had adopted a Coloured daughter and a picture of this daughter and her White sister was splashed onto the front page with the two shown looking distastefully at the card. Needless to say, this picture was wholly unrepresentative, as only a small minority of those receiving the cards had reacted in this way.

As for the "greeting of hate," it is difficult to know how any rational person could have thus described the card, for there was no language of hatred in it whatsoever. It gave a small synopsis of the main BNP policies, including that of stopping immigration and starting repatriation, but nowhere was there printed anything abusive or hateful to Coloured people.

Tony Wells pointed this out in a letter to the paper but, needless to say, the letter was not printed. The Ilford Recorder is not a paper which believes in giving those it has abused the right of reply. Redbridge, which contains the old borough of Ilford, is one of the most heavily Jewish populated parts of London, and the paper depends heavily on Jewish patronage to stay in business.

Neither Tony Wells nor the party, however, are disconcerted. The front-page headline gave the party big publicity and drew to the contents of the greetings card the attention of many thousands who had not previously seen it. This was all due to one young party activist taking his own initiative to put the party on the map in his neighbourhood, then dipping into his pocket to carry the initiative through. Well done, Tony Wells!

RACIST CARD TO FAMILY FOSTERING BLACKS

Sick greeting of hate

FURY AT PLOY TO WOO THE YOUNG

By ELAINE COOPER

THE daughter of a white couple who foster black children received a birthday card this week from a race hate group — urging her to join their party.

And the sick vote-catching ploy — by the ultra-Right wing British National Party — has also angered the parents of other Redbridge teenagers who have received similar cards on their eighteenth birthdays.

The message from the extremists was particularly distressing to foster parents Albert and Daphne Holmes.

The British National Party, an off-shoot of the National Front, advocate repatriation of black and coloured immigrants. They are wishing youngsters a "great" time and urging them to "put the Great back into Britain" by joining up.

Their card to Christina Holmes contained a note which said: "The British National Party cares about white youth, cares about you and your future and cares for our country."

Mr. Holmes, 56, said: "Everyone knows they're a race hate group. It's offensive to get something like this."

The card arrived at the Holmes' home in Merton Drive, Seven Kings, with genuine cards.

Mrs. Holmes, 54, said: "It spoiled our morning."

"Christina was happy opening the cards and then she saw this. It's disgusting, an invasion of privacy.

Liverpool BNP beat frame-up

LIVERPOOL British National Party have recently been engaged in an ongoing battle to preserve their right to sell and distribute party literature in the city.

The BNP sales pitch in the busy thoroughfare of Church Street, at which branch activists sell New Frontier, Spearhead and Young Nationalist, has been under regular threat of attack by red mobs comprising members of the Socialist Workers' Party, Workers' Revolutionary Party and Revolutionary Communist Party. Several attempts of intimidation have been made, including threats of stabbing, by the mobs, many of whom are Black. The BNP activists, however, have stood their ground and intend to continue doing so.

Another threat to the party's right to distribute its literature has come from certain members of Special Branch, the political establishment's police wing. Many SB men, like most ordinary policemen, are decent citizens and prepared to give nationalists a fair crack of the whip. There are always, however, a few rotten apples in the basket and evidently Merseyside SB has one or two of these.

Certain SB men tried to 'frame' local nationalist Don McKechnie when they stopped him one day in the city and forced him to show them the contents of a bag of leaflets dealing with the racial question. Although they deemed these leaflets as contravening the Race Relations laws, Mr. McKechnie replied that this was irrelevant, since he was not distributing them to the general public but planned to hand them out to members of a special study group. Later they abandoned their plans to charge Mr. McKechnie over these leaflets, obviously after having consulted legal advice and been told that such charges would not stick. The next trick they tried was to raid a young activist's home and obtain other literature which they claimed infringed the Race Relations laws and then to allege that this literature had been found in the bag carried by Don McKechnie.

When the case went to court, however, the judge presiding refused to have the wool pulled over his eyes and recognised the charge for the frame-up that it was. The BNP thereby won a great moral victory.

On side 1 of the cassette are recordings of the speeches by Charles Parker and Ray Hill; on side 2 is the closing speech by John Tyndall.

TYNDALL SPEAKS (II)

This cassette features the 4th and 5th of a series of specially recorded talks by John Tyndall, made in a studio employing Hi-Fi equipment. The talks are:–

Side 1: The case for nationalism. In this talk the BNP leader demolishes the most frequently used arguments employed in opposition to the nationalist idea and urges that that idea is now essential to Britain's survival.

Side 2: Tragedy of the 20th Century. In this recording Tyndall speaks of World War II and its ruinous consequences for Britain and the West.

Both these talks provide ideal instructional material for educating young people in nationalism.

We also remind everyone of two other recordings still available which have proved very popular. These are:–

VOICES OF NATIONALISM

Side 1 of this cassette features recordings of parts of the speeches made at the Nationalist Unity rally in London on September 5th 1981. Hear John Tyndall, Ray Hill, Kenneth McKilliam, Len Bearsford Walker and others.

Side 2 consists of the third of the series of specially recorded talks by John Tyndall entitled The coming British revolution. In this talk Tyndall exposes the fraud of the political system masquerading as 'democracy' and outlines vital changes needed to raise the level of British political leadership.

TYNDALL SPEAKS (I)

The first of two recorded talks of a series by the BNP leader. These are:–

Side 1: Our Anglo-Saxon heritage. This talk is about the great world-wide heritage of the Anglo-Saxon-Celtic peoples and calls for their unity.

Side 2: Britain's economic crisis. Tyndall talks about the breakdown of the British economy over a long period and calls for a new economic policy based on economic nationalism.

OUT AND ABOUT

DECEMBER and the Xmas period being the least suitable season of the year for public activities, BNP party work was concentrated during that month mainly on internal liaison and preparation for campaigns to take place in 1983.

On December 7th party Leader John Tyndall addressed a meeting of the Manchester branch and spoke about the internal schism within British Nationalism. Following the meeting there have been numerous new applications for membership.

On December 19th National Organiser Charles Parker spoke to Worcester branch on the subject of preparation for the next General Election, at which the party hopes to fight 50 seats.
